A family affair

1/12 hosts Family Day, event allows up close look at mission

The Marines and Sailors of 1st Bn., 12th Marine Regiment, pulled out the big guns May 31, and gave their family members a battery employment demonstration and an up-close and personal view of what they do every day.

The demonstrations, which included all aspects of moving a battery into gun positions, were part of 1/12's Family Day.

"My family has an idea of what I do, but this event is great because it lets them actually see what I do," said Staff Sgt. Felix Gonzalez, section chief for Gun 3, Charlie Battery, 1/12. "It's also a good chance for the families to meet other families."

Gonzalez said the event was also good training for his Marines. The gun team teams sent forward observers to the position first, then an advance party, and then the guns rolled in.

Each team member went through the procedures of laying the guns and shifting them to different firing positions.

Everyone in the battalion had a chance to participate, as the demonstration included the Marines on the gun line, ammunition Marines, communications Marines, Fire Direction Control, motor transport, and forward observers.

Lieutenant Col. John Sullivan, the battalion commander, said 1/12 has been trying to pull an event like this off since February, but other training, or sometimes the weather, forced postponement.

"This lets the families get up close and see exactly what their husbands and fathers do for a living," Sullivan said. "It's a great way to spice up a family day, and it gives everyone a better understanding of our job."

In addition to the demonstration of 1/12's combat capabilities, the battalion family day included a barbecue, a bouncy house, and even a visit by "Happy Day," the clown, all to the delight of 1/12 children.

"This is impressive," said family member Kathleen Graycochea. "We just got married, and I have never seen anything like this. The guns are so much bigger than I thought."

Children like Patrick Deets, 4, saw what their fathers do for a living. Each had the chance to see

Summer drives can mean sun glare

NAPS Featurettes

The sun is shining and the temperature's rising. Both can be hazards for vehicles.

Though motorists often take drives to enjoy their "down time" — some leisurely, some at a faster pace — glare from the sun, sudden rain showers and other traffic can pose hazards, said Mary Kimbro of the CertifiedFirst(tm) Network.

By following a few safety tips, motorists can help prevent potential traffic accidents, caused by environmental factors. Try these tips:

- Be sure your vehicle's windshield is clean and the wipers are in proper working order.
- Keep a pair of sunglasses in your car. Reflections or glare from the sun can limit visibility.
- Watch carefully for stop signs and other traffic directives.
- Maintain a safe following distance behind other vehicles, as you never know when another motorist may stop to smell the roses.

- Always follow posted speed limits, especially in parks and recreational areas, and be alert for children at play.

Web site allows families to screen movies

NAPS Featurettes

Parents who know just how "family friendly" a movie really is — before going to it — may have more fun with their children at the cinema.

If you want to enjoy more movies with your family, it may help to have a clearer picture of what different shows are about.

For example, unbeknownst to parents, some movies may be great for families, or some movies may be scarier than parents might have expected — turning a family night at the movies into a week of children's nightmares.

That's one reason a number of people now pay particular attention to movie reviews, but also consider their sources. For instance, one popular service, accessible by telephone or the Internet, features reviews from the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB). The reviews include concise storyline summaries and an analysis of each film's moral values.

Films are also rated for age appropriateness according to a classification system developed by the USCCB Office for Film & Broadcasting. The reviews, which are updated every Friday, also include a recommendation for a "Family Friendly Video," for those times when you can't make it to the theaters.

The group classifies movies according to the following system:

- A-I: General patronage
- A-II: Adults and adolescents
- A-III: Adults
- A-IV: Adults with reservations
- O: Morally objectionable.

A movie that receives a certain classification isn't necessarily recommended or banned by the reviewers. For example, a recent movie, though classified as "A-I," was rated as "mildly pleasant," with a "pre-fab" quality that even a "good cast" couldn't overcome.

In addition to new reviews, family-film buffs can search the USCCB's archived reviews on the group's Web site.

To access the service, call toll free to 1-800-311-4222, or visit www.usccb.org.

MOVIE TIME

Prices: Adults (12 and older) $3, Children (6 to 11) $1.50, Children (5 and younger) free.

Awareness key to suicide prevention

Cpl. Jason E. Miller
Combat Correspondent

With the summer holidays upon us, many Marines and Sailors aboard MCB Hawaii are taking advantage of annual leave and celebrating their hard-earned days off.

Other service members, however, who may not be faring so well — due to alcohol, drug or other problems — could at any time become increasingly depressed and even suicidal.

While the Marine Corps logged no suicides during the month of April this year, it is, as always, important for Marines and Sailors to consider the welfare of their fellow service members.

“Usually, suicide attempts are a cry for help,” said Petty Officer 3rd Class Sheila Hicks, a neuropsychiatric technician at the Branch Medical Clinic aboard Kaneohe Bay. “A lot of times, if the person is helped, he will not follow through with trying to kill himself.

“There is a need for education and awareness, because suicide attempts can be prevented and NCOs are some of the major [people] who can help a junior Marine or Sailor in trouble.”

Several warning signs predate the attempt. For example, unexplained changes in behavior and productivity in the workplace are near the top of the list, said Hicks.

Other things that a suicidal person might do include abusing alcohol or drugs, or reflecting death themes — either in clothing, music or journal entries left lying around.

Large increases or decreases in sleep can also signal a problem, as can changes in a person’s personal appearance due to a lack of appropriate grooming habits.

“Oftentimes, when a person is contemplating suicide, he will begin collecting weapons and giving away personal possessions,” said Hicks. “They may also begin giving goodbyes to people they care about, for no apparent reason.”

If anyone notices any of these signs, he or she should first ask the individual if he is planning on hurting himself.

If so, help should be contacted immediately, or the person should be brought to the nearest medical facility.

Once the individual is brought to the facility, they will be assessed and if they agree, will be treated.

If a person will not agree to help and is still intent on hurting himself, he will be admitted to the facility as he poses a safety issue to himself.

Help and counseling are also offered to military members through chaplains or Marine Corps Community Services’ Personal Services.

There are several simple things a person can do to help prevent stress and depression, according to Hicks.

Eating right and getting regular exercise can be an effective stress reliever, as can getting proper amounts of sleep. Decreasing or eliminating alcohol is also effective since alcohol is a depressant.

Local Goodwill Industries responds to most asked questions, needs support

Press Release

Goodwill Industries of Hawaii

Q: What donations does Goodwill need the most?

A: Goodwill Industries is looking for items that are in clean, saleable condition. Our definition of clean, saleable condition is that you would give them to a good friend. Donate items such as women’s, men’s and children’s clothing; small, working electrical appliances; office or home furniture; kitchen housewares; dishes, pots & pans; cooking and serving containers; shoes and boots; books; linens and domestic items; and toys, games and collectibles.

Q: How do I know if Goodwill cannot use something?

A: Goodwill cannot use and cannot accept certain items. The non-profit organization declines donations of the following items: Major appliances such as refrigerators and stoves; air conditioners; furniture requiring repair or reupholstery; newspapers, magazines and textbooks; chemicals such as paints, poisons and cleaners; copy machines; tires and wheels; firearms; swing sets and exercise equipment; and children’s furniture such as cribs and high chairs. If in doubt, call to double-check about questionable items.

Q: Goodwill asks that donations be in clean, resaleable condition. Why? Don’t you repair things any more?

A: No. Items are processed and sold as they are. The costs and liability associated with cleaning and refurbishing items raised dramatically in the past several years. Therefore, the better the condition of your donation, the more it helps keep collection, processing and waste disposal costs under control, which benefits Goodwill occupational skills and pre-employment training and job placement programs.

(Editor’s Note: Goodwill Industries of Hawaii is a private, non-profit corporation serving Hawaii’s community since 1959. Goodwill provides 26 different occupational skills training, job placement and support services programs for people with various barriers to employment. For more information about Goodwill Industries, contact a representative at 834-1017.)

Students should review 'top 10' degree traps

Carol Berry

Naval College Office, NAS Oceana, Va.

Diploma Mills are notorious for imitating in superficial ways the structures and functions of legitimate degree programs.

Conversely, there are many legitimate programs that offer nontraditional degrees in an effort to serve the needs of adult students.

That's why it is difficult to develop a comprehensive list of characteristics that one can use to spot a Diploma Mill.

Students can spot some characteristics; however, use the following list with caution. It exemplifies the characteristics one may find — though not always — typical of Diploma Mills.

Students are encouraged to beware and to investigate thoroughly any institution before beginning a program.

Service members are encouraged to check with their Education Center.

Characteristics of Diploma Mills:

1. The organization may have a name similar to a well-known college or academy.

2. The address often suggests a prestigious location, but mail may only be received at a post office box or mail service, and the organization may frequently change its address.

There may be no significant cluster of physical facilities; it operates from a single office or maybe a private residence.

3. Full-time staff are few in number and lack qualifications appropriate for serving as professional educators or educational administrators.

Part-time staff, most of whom are full-time with other organizations, are heavily used to provide instruction or academic services.

Many or all faculty lack appropriate advanced degrees from recognized and accredited higher educational institutions, or they may have degrees from the Diploma Mill itself.

Long lists of degrees typically follow the names of faculty members at the institution.

4. There is little or no selectivity in admissions. Frequently no admissions requirements are listed.

Degree requirements, if any, are few and frequently unspecified.

5. Degrees ordinarily can be obtained in a time frame far shorter than that required for the completion of a program at a generally recognized and accredited institution.

6. Tuition and fees are usually on a per-degree basis. Assessment of learning outcomes or achievement is minimal or nonexistent.

7. The organization has no library or maintains inferior resources than that expected of a degree-granting institution.

8. Great emphasis is placed on granting credit for work experience and prior life experiences without appropriate mechanisms for assessing the experience in terms of college-level work.

Sometimes the assessment is offered free to prospective students on a mail-order basis with an implied promise that more can be expected upon official enrollment.

9. Terms such as nontraditional, alternative, and innovative are used to gloss over a multitude of requirements.

10. The words "state-authorized" or "state-approved" are used to suggest that the organization has undergone a process of academic review comparable to accreditation.

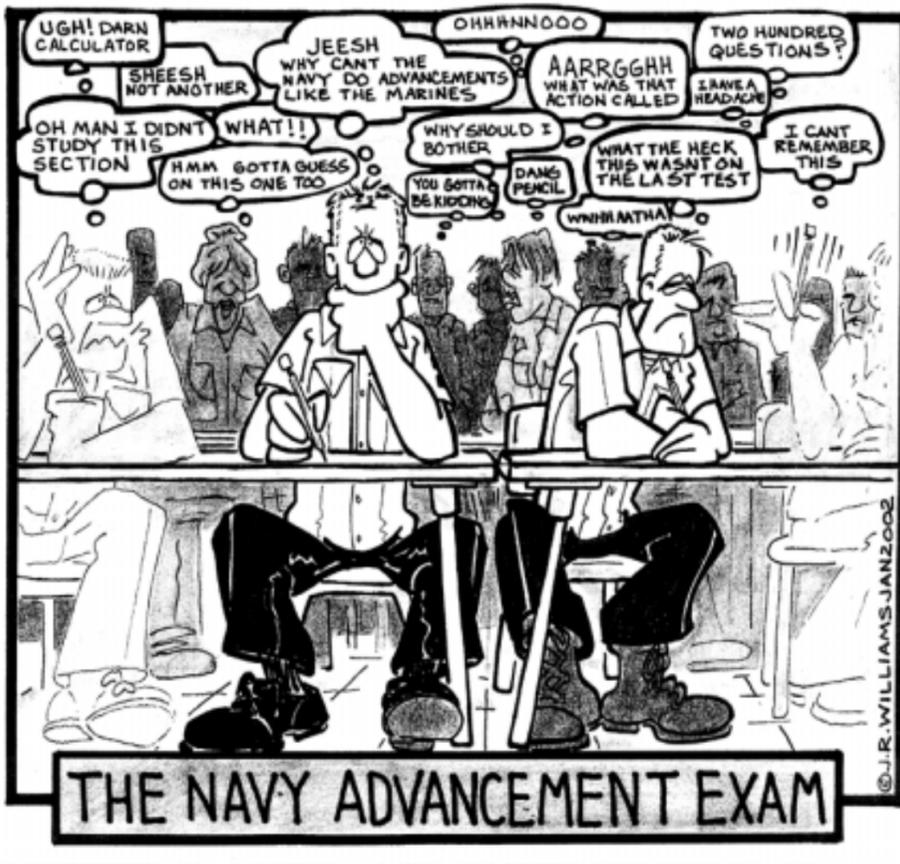

The organization is not accredited by an agency recognized by the U.S. Department of Education, and promotional materials may, however, list agencies not recognized by the Department.

The Education Center, the Lifelong Learning Center, or the Navy College Office are excellent resources for service members to use when assessing the legitimacy of an educational institution.

The book Bear's Guide to Earning College Degrees by Distance Learning is another resource to consult to avoid the pitfalls of enrolling in a Diploma Mill.

HPU renames Oahu's base satellite courses

For the past 28 years, Hawaii Pacific University has provided educational services to the military community through its off-campus programs located on Oahu's seven major military installations.

Currently called Satellite Programs, HPU has renamed the division to Military Campus Programs, to better reflect its ongoing representation and commitment to the military community.

The Military Campus Programs, which currently serve nearly 2,500 students, offers 10-week accelerated semesters, plus shorter interim terms, year-round, to meet the needs of military personnel, family members and veterans who are seeking higher education in a time frame that permits them to complete their degrees.

Hawaii Pacific University maintains full-service counselling and enrollment assistance at military education offices, and is accredited by the Western Association of Schools and Colleges. The university has won numerous commendations.
