As part of the nationwide celebration of Make a Difference Day, the MCB Hawaii community came together Saturday to make several necessary improvements at Mokapu Elementary School.

Make a Difference Day is an annual event celebrating neighbors helping neighbors, where millions of people across the country volunteer on the fourth Saturday in October to improve their communities.

"This is the third year we have done this here, and we get more support every time," said Mokapu Principal Amy Arakaka. "We had more than 100 volunteers this year, and we were able to do a lot of projects we can't normally do during the school year."

Throughout the day, students, teachers and parents worked on campus improvements which included making shelves and benches, painting those shelves and benches, and hanging fans in several of the classrooms.

The volunteers also did landscaping, gardening, and cleaning.

"I'm doing this because I like helping my school," said Heather Hellyer, a 4th-grader at Mokapu, who painted a large science project cart. Allie Windham, a 3rd-grader working on the same project, said she just likes to paint.

"I have a daughter who goes to school here," said Staff Sgt. Edwin Velasco, facilities manager for MCB Hawaii's command headquarters. "We need to take care of the school so they can better take care of her."

No matter what the reasons for volunteering, the event was a success at bringing the parents, teachers and students closer together.

"This really makes the connection better between the parents and the teachers," said first grade teacher Barbara Camarillo. "There is a good connection already, but it gets better when we work on the school together."

Make a Difference Day was created 11 years ago by USA Weekend Magazine. Participation has grown each year, and the event has gained popularity in Hawaii.

More than 27 Make a Difference Day projects were completed on Oahu Saturday, including a Halloween party for homeless children in Kaneohe, stream restoration efforts at He'eia and Manoa, a blood drive, a food drive, and several other projects at elderly care facilities, churches and hospitals.

Mokapu wasn't the only school to get a facelift Saturday. Make a Difference Day brought volunteers and needed improvements at Kalaheo High School, Radford High School and Hawaii Public Elementary School.

Simon wins second Marine Corps Marathon

Sgt. Katesha Nimman

Farley Simon, a retired Marine and Honolulu resident, wins the Marine Corps Marathon for the second time — the only Marine ever to do so. He won his first Marine Corps Marathon in 1983 while on active duty. Simon retired from the Marine Corps in 2000.

WASHINGTON — The Marine Corps Marathon ended much like the way it began for Farley Simon with thousands of spectators cheering loudly and waving American flags as he made the final turn towards the finish line at the Marine Corps War Memorial.

"I came to this marathon with the intention of winning, but I didn't know I was going to," said Simon, a Honolulu native who retired from the Marine Corps last November.

Simon, 46, won his second marathon in four tries with a finishing time of 2:28:28. He won his first marathon as a Marine sergeant, the only Marine to do so, during his second Marine Marathon race in 1983. Although a bit familiar with the course, he spent a little more time preparing for what he was about to see along the way.

"It's amazing when you see the Pentagon in person," said Simon.

He said he made a trip to the Pentagon days prior to help him focus better on race day.

"As soon as we made that turn and the Pentagon came into view, I couldn't keep my eyes off of it," said Simon.

Creek Park.

Thousands of spectators who lined the city streets, to include Marines, Sailors and civilian volunteers who manned numerous water points and aid stations, kept the spirits high by cheering the runners on as they made their way through the relatively flat course. Quantico's own DJ Manny, the Marine Corps Band, and several high school bands from Maryland and Virginia joined in the festivities with music to energize runners along the way.

"I was really inspired by the crowd," said 31-year-old Lori Stich-Zimmerman, who finished first for the females at 2:48:13. "It was really amazing."

The marathon is an amateur race that offers no prize to the winner. Many ran the race not necessarily for a prize, but for other reasons such as gaining attention for the disabled, leukemia, and cerebral palsy. Some people, like the "Ground Pounders," have made it a "Marine Corps tradition" by running every one of the 25 previous races. But as people ran past the extra security surrounding the course area, and the Pentagon as they came within yards of the impact area, a slight reminder of the tragic terrorist attacks on Sept. 11 came to mind.

"Everything is a bit different," said Steve Platt, a District of Columbia native who is making his third marathon as a supporter for the runners. "I'm just glad they put it on and didn't cancel it."

Others did everything they could to show their support for the runners, like Dan Monte, Clifton, Va., who stopped to wave his small flag over the green meshed fence surrounding the damaged Pentagon. His shouts of encouragement to the runners were well appreciated as they shouted back with cheers and a "thank you."

"I'm proud of my country," said Monte. "I'm proud of all these people today."

Other notable finishers of the Marine Corps Marathon include second year in a row wheelchair winner Kamal Ayari, 33, New Rochelle, N.Y., who finished the wheelchair race with a time of 1:58:17.

For other finishing results, visit the Marine Corps Marathon website at www.marinemarathon.com.

MALSEK Sailor pursues artistic ambition

Cpl. Roman Yurek
Lifestyles Editor

Staring at a blank sheet of paper, he begins picturing what can fill that void of white. Then as the picture begins to reveal itself in his mind, he frantically scribbles on the paper.

Working furiously to capture the image before it disappears, the graphite begins shading and putting form to the blank page.

After what could be minutes or hours, the picture has finally been transferred onto the paper and the artist can sit back and admire his triumph.

For Petty Officer 2nd Class John Williams, a legal petty officer for Marine Aviation Logistic Support Element, Kaneohe, the ability to take a real life scene and transpose it into a piece of art is a passion.

"When I was in kindergarten, my teacher told us all to go home and draw a picture of our pets. I drew my beagle. When she saw it, she took it around to the entire district," said the 49-year-old Sailor.

Since his discovery at age 5, Williams has developed a love for painting and drawing.

As a youngster, his inspiration came from Warner Bros. and Disney cartoons. Then he began taking art classes to develop his skills.

When he was old enough, Williams began work at a fiber glass company in Washington. His career in art ended there when his co-workers would not allow him to become an apprentice due to his advanced skill.

Then a short trip to the store began a career in the Navy.

"One day my wife wanted me to go to the store for bread and milk. In between my house and the store was a Navy recruiting station. So I stopped in and after talking for 30 minutes, I joined the Navy," Williams stated with a grin.

In response, his wife reacted in a way that could be expected, "You did what?"

In the end, his choice to join the Navy was for the best. Williams has served more than 17 years.

After Williams reached his 13-year mark, he found out that there was a job in the Navy where he could put his artistic abilities to use. With no degree and only some schooling, the chances of acceptance were slim; plus the field was closed.

A year later, the field opened, but the now 47-year-old Sailor said he felt that it would not be worth a job change this late in his career. Also, he is not as skilled with computer graphics as he is with a pencil.

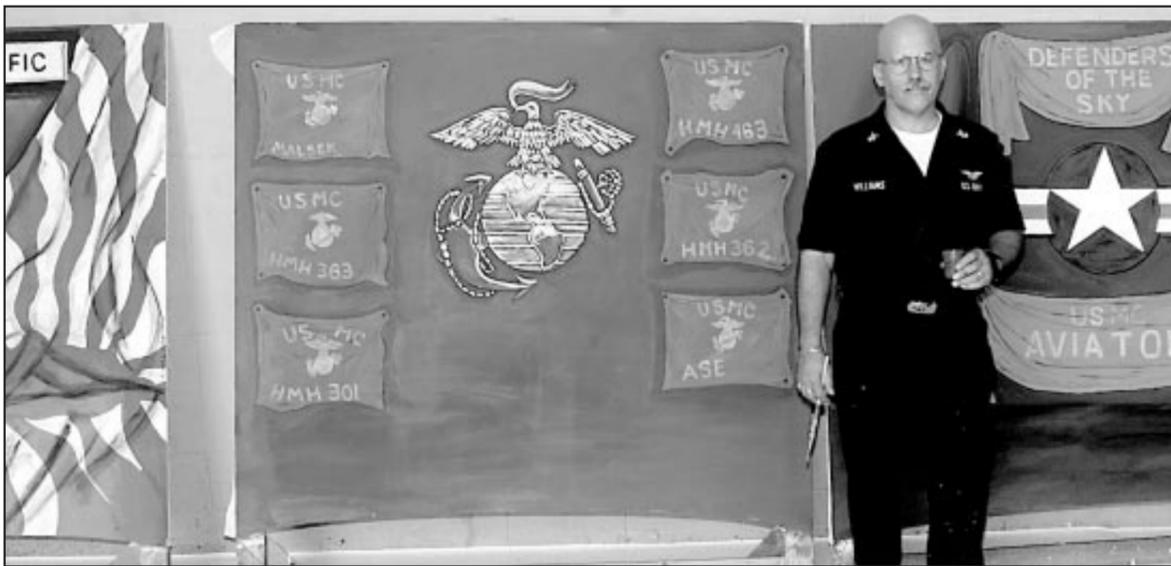

With close to three years left in his career, Williams and his wife are planning on opening a craft store. They will combine their knowledge of crafts, his artistry and her ability to work with cross-stitching.

For now, Williams does odd jobs, like the mural he is painting for the MALSEK Marine Corps Birthday Ball skit. It is a series of four painting resembling a museum display.

He has done other odd jobs in the past.

"The biggest mural I ever painted was 15 by 100 feet," said Williams. "My brother-in-law had these calves in a barn and they kept making noise all day long. So I went in there and painted outdoor scenes. It actually worked, the calves settled down."

Though some of his odder jobs are in the past, residents of MCB Hawaii and readers of the Hawaii Marine can watch for the work of Williams in a cartoon strip that will appear in the Hawaii Marine.

Smith led the entire race and ended up taking home the victory as she ran behind a golf cart that followed the race course.

Ten different Western Athletic Conference schools, including the University of Hawaii, were represented at this year's WAC Cross Country Championship held at MCB Hawaii's Kaneohe Klipper golf course on Saturday morning.

The men's event began promptly at 8 a.m. A rainbow of color streamed across the bright green grass of the golf course as more than 50 contestants dressed proudly in their school's colors took off on an eight kilometer race of endurance and pure physical will.

The lead pack seemed to be full of orange though, as two University of Texas at El Paso athletes led the charge for the first quarter of the run.

After the pack had thinned and the runners rounded the last corner of the race, there was only one El Paso student, Bashar Ibrahim, in front, followed by a runner from Southern Methodist University, David Gerych, who was the second to cross the finish line. Bashar finished the course in a time of 24 minutes, 58.7 seconds to take the win.

As the women prepared for their run, shorter five kilometer course, there was a definite favorite who was expected to lead the University of Hawaii to a victory.

Shortly after the crack of the gun, it was clear that Cheryl Smith wasn't going to disappoint as she quickly took a commanding lead over the competition. The lead only grew as the race wore on. Smith finished the race in a time of 17:42.8, setting a new course record that beat the old record by ten seconds.

Another UH athlete, Casey McGuire-Turcotte followed Smith to the finish to come in 2nd place.

"I was pretty intent on winning because I finished third here last year," said Cheryl. "I didn't want to finish second this year. I wanted the win and I'm just glad I finally did it."

Mental illnesses are common in one out of five people, that's more than 240,000 people in Hawaii with a mental illness.

These problems are treatable and have better success rates than many other persistent health problems.

For more information on how to donate a vehicle, call the Mental Health Association in Hawaii at 521-1846.

Olo Ka Lau Coming Soon

For hundreds of years, Hawaiians took care of their illnesses with their own medicine, extracted from the natural environment and accompanied by chants and healing rituals.

Their knowledge was passed down through the generations in the oral tradition.

In modern times, with high-tech hospitals and over-the-counter medication, will the ancient ways survive?

Playwright Kimo Armitage brings this dilemma to life in a story of two brothers, one reluctant to learn the old ways and the other an eager student.

Olo Ka Lau explores this family problem Nov. 8 through Dec. 9 at the Kumu Kahua Theater.
