Discovering Waimea Valley

The valley is home to more than just waterfalls

WAIMEA — Anyone who enjoys the outdoors shouldn't leave Oahu without visiting the Waimea Valley Audubon Center, located off Kamehameha Highway in Haleiwa, on Oahu's Windward coast.

The botanical gardens, which now host more than 5,000 types of tropical plants, were once home to between 1,000 – 2,000 Hawaiians around 10,000 A. D., who first settled on the islands' valleys and rivers.

Waimea Valley was given to high priests. It soon became the educational center for the "Kahuna," or experts of their time, according to Auntie Ka'ula, a Hawaii native, and the 15-year cultural interpreter for Waimea Valley.

The Kahuna were priests, botanists, geologists, carvers and other skilled professionals, she explained. Kahuna was given as the professional title. "Kahuna pule" was a religious priest. "Kahuna kilo lani" was the one who watched the heavens or an astronomer.

The Kahunas practiced their respective fields in sacred temples that were located throughout the valley. Only after 14 years of study would the Kahuna travel to Ana Hulu Valley for 10 days of meditation and intense practice. This was the final stage before one could become a full-fledged Kahuna.

When King Kamehameha, the first person to unite and rule all the Hawaiian islands, conquered Oahu, he gave the valley to his high priest. The sacred burial grounds of his priest are still found in this valley, but only a few know of its location. Due to the sacred nature of the site, visitors are not allowed to go there, said Ka'ula.

Realizing the value of the valley, Charles Pietsch purchased Waimea Valley in 1974 and worked hard to protect the archeological sites and make them what they are today.

Botanist Rudy Mitchell helped gather important ethno-botanical specimens in the late '70s and early '80s. Waimea was soon well recognized and became the first garden in Hawaii to join the Center for Plant Conservation.

Today, the valley has grown into one of the more prominent botanical gardens in the world, and this month is especially unique. The Colvillea racemosa tree has flowered for only the second time in 30 years. Originally brought from Madagascar, the racemosa is one of the rarest plants on earth.

Waimea is also home to several species of birds, both native and foreign. Hailing from Malaysia to Japan, the birds of the valley live in sanctity, and their songs can be heard throughout the gardens.

Whether exploring alone or on a guided tour, the whole day can easily be spent exploring in Waimea Valley. This is truly one of Oahu's treasures, steeped in tradition and engulfed in a green blanket of the most exotic plants, trees and flowers anywhere.

The small price of admission will buy memories that will easily outlast the life of $20 bills. For more information, call Waimea Valley at 638-9199, or visit www.Audubon.org.

Above — The pink Hibiscus is common in the gardens of Waimea Valley.

Below — The bright orange flower of the Colvillea racemosa, originally from Madagascar, only blooms once every 15 years.

Located in the first part of Waimea Valley, this pond is home to many different species of lily pads, birds and plants — a respite for weary adventurers.

QUANTICO, Va. — Marine Corps Family Team Building (MCFTB) has partnered with the Training and Education Command (TECOM) to develop an online multimedia version of the Lifestyle Insights, Networking, Knowledge and Skills (LINKS) program that is available at the MarineNet Online Learning Web site.

The LINKS program provides an orientation to Marine Corps lifestyles, helping new spouses adapt to the unique challenges military life often presents.

Traditionally, LINKS is delivered through a partnership of volunteer spouses, MCFTB staff, Marine Corps career retention specialists and chaplains. The curriculum focuses on spouses new to the Marine Corps community, but any spouse is welcome to attend.

The online format has been developed to accommodate the needs of Marine spouses not currently able to attend traditional LINKS training sessions such as spouses at remote duty stations as well as those whose schedules do not permit them to attend.

To get to LINKS Online, surf over to www.marinenet.usmc.mil. Once there, log in using your Social Security number and use your date of birth as the password. Savvy, smart consumers save with coupons

NAPS

Featurettes

Consumers are often amazed to find out that they can save as much as 20 percent on weekly shopping expenses by spending as little as 20 minutes per week clipping coupons. Over the course of a year, this can add up — and with $800 or $1,000 extra dollars in your pocket, you can afford to splurge on a luxury item, a vacation or simply feel better knowing you have drastically reduced your household expenses.

According to the Promotion Marketing Association Coupon Council, almost 80 percent of Americans use coupons and together saved more than $3 billion last year. It just goes to show, anyone can be a smart shopper, regardless of income or age, as long as he or she remembers to clip coupons!

What do you need to know to be a smart shopper?

•Look for coupons in the newspaper, in magazines, in your mailbox, at the grocery store and with your cash register receipts.

•Keep those scissors nearby as you go through the newspaper, so you can clip as you go.

•Use coupons everywhere, not just at the grocery store. Coupons can be redeemed at many types of stores, including retail mass merchandisers, convenience stores, drug stores and even dollar stores.

•Whatever you want, there is probably a coupon for it. This year saw an increase in coupons available for discounts on a variety of products and services, including apparel, accessories and home electronics.

•Watch for discounts on entertainment, too. Lots of coupons exist for restaurants (even fast-food), movies and other entertainment.

•Watch for Bonus Coupon Days. Many retailers offer bonus coupon savings, which can mean two or three times the coupon face value.

Cpl. Jessica M. Mills

Etal Felton, a discriminating shopper at the commissary, pulls a Nabisco coupon off one of the many store coupon displays.

•Keep your coupons organized by category and expiration date. Many wallet-like coupon organizers are available for this purpose, and make the job faster and easier. Keep your organizer with you, either in your car, briefcase or tote bag.

•Use coupons in conjunction with loyalty or frequent shopping cards from your local retailers to maximize savings.

•Coupons can cut your grocery bills and feed the hungry at the same time. Use coupon savings to purchase products as a charitable donation.

For even more money-saving coupon clip tips, visit www.couponmonth.com, or search Google.com for the host of coupon sites available.

Millionaire attributes success to Marine Corps

Cpl. Luis R. Agostini
Marine Forces Pacific

U.S. MARINE CORPS FORCES PACIFIC, CAMP H. M. SMITH — "I'm a better Marine now than I was thirty years ago."

Robert T. Kiyosaki, best-selling author of the Rich Dad series and a former Marine gunship pilot during the Vietnam War, explained how his worldwide success as a financial leader stemmed from his Marine Corps experience during a phone interview Nov. 4.

"If you're going to be successful in business, you have to find a place to develop character," said Kiyosaki. "The Marine Corps did that for me. The toughness, the discipline, the training — it carries on, and it made a man out of me."

A son of two former antiwar Peace Corps workers, Kiyosaki was deemed ineligible for the draft during the Vietnam Era, due to his employment with Standard Oil's tanker office, based out of California, a "nondefense vital industry."

After debating whether to attend the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Md., or the U.S. Military Academy, West Point, N.Y., Kiyosaki decided to enroll in the U.S. Merchant Marine Academy, and graduated from the King's Point, N.Y.-based school in 1969.

That same year, his brother volunteered to join the Air Force. That's when the soon-to-be Marine lieutenant questioned his own courage and integrity.

"Am I a coward or not?" he asked himself. "There weren't a lot of flag wavers at the time."

When looking to join one of the armed services, Kiyosaki was warned by a Marine Corps recruiter, "If you talk to them [the other services], don't talk to me."

That bold statement alone easily lured him into the Marine Corps.

"I didn't have to go," he explained. "I volunteered not because I liked the war, but because it was the right thing to do."

Kiyosaki, an Arizona resident, fought in the Vietnam War from January 1972 to 1973, and briefly as a U.S. Merchant Marine midshipman in 1966.

"[Mariners] actually lost people in the war," said Kiyosaki. "It was what was called a battle standard. The Naval Academy, West Point — they don't have that."

Attached to Marine Medium Helicopter Squadron 264, comprised of Hueys, CH-46s and CH-53s, the young Lt. Kiyosaki was greeted by tracer rounds during his first flight into country.

"Holy [expletive]! What are those things?" Kiyosaki recalls asking.

A Gunnery Sgt. Jackson, on the bird with the startled gunship pilot, tapped him on the shoulder and informed Kiyosaki that he had seen his type before. Jackson then gave Kiyosaki some vital wartime wisdom.

"You know what's bad about this job? There's no second place. Either you go home or we go home, but both of us aren't going home," recalled Kiyosaki.

Kiyosaki ended his tenure in the Corps at Marine Corps Air Station, Kaneohe Bay, Hawaii.

According to him, 95 percent of his success came from the Corps' character development, which stems from strengthening values such as courage, integrity and honesty.

"A lot of the guys who are good businessmen, from WorldCom and Enron, lacked character, and that's why they fell," he said.

Regardless of the levels of success he has achieved, the Wall Street Journal best-selling author continually strives to improve himself.

"Training is continuous. It doesn't end after you leave the Marine Corps. I value it [the training] more now than I did when I was in."

Kiyosaki developed his hard-nosed style of leadership from his experiences with senior staff noncommissioned officers and flag generals he encountered.

"A lot of people are afraid to tell the truth, to say no. That's where toughness comes into play. Toughness is not being a bully. It's having backbone.

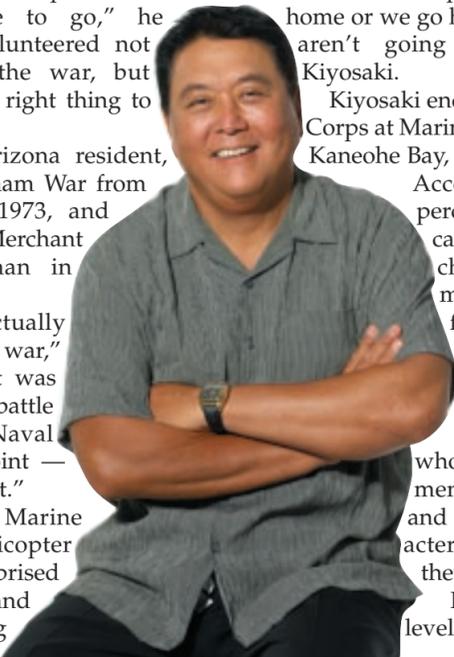

"You don't have to pull rank if you're a good leader," he explained, and jokingly followed up, "but if you're a weak leader, pull rank!"

The former devil dog's instincts still kick in every now and then. When Kiyosaki encounters commonplace civilian habits that would normally warrant verbal thrashings in the Marine Corps, it's hard for him to maintain his composure.

"I had this one 22-year-old punk come in for a job. The guy put his feet up on my desk," recalled Kiyosaki. "Can you imagine putting your feet on your CO's [commanding officer's] desk?"

Running into former Marines from time to time, Kiyosaki says that he's never met any Marine who's had something bad to say about the Marine Corps.

"That tells you something about that training."
